Below you will find a collection of photographs that you might like to use with your children. I suggest using these at the beginning of your story making with your children but you can always refer back to them as you go along. It's for you to choose when is best. The children might ask to see them again of course. These pictures are arranged to relate to the order of our story

The volcanos threaten us

We cross the island along a track

We hope to see somewhere beautiful

We end up in stormy weather at a deserted harbour
